Setting (when/where the story takes place)

Well, Sarah Harland is in the prison, but she isn't alone, Hassan her current boyfriend is in the prison too.

They were at the airport when the police found three tubes of toothpaste with heroin in them. These tubes were in Sarah's bag. They took her into a room and told her to take her dress off, but they found nothing.

But if she did not, who did?

Many clues pointing to Hassan, maybe he did it to get money (Everybody knows that heroin is one of the most expensive drugs), they both said that they didn't do it.

One day Anna Harland (Sarah's mother) went to see her daughter to the prison, she told her the truth, but not all the truth...

Sarah is pregnant, she is going to have a baby, so the rules change, they can't kill a mother with her baby, that's the law.

Anna was very surprised with the news, but she helps her to catch the real culprit.

Some minutes later Anna went to talk with Stephen (the old Sarah's boyfriend) and he told her all the truth.

He was who put the heroin into her bag, but he wanted Hassan to die not Sarah. Anna was so confused, she took him to the judge and he started to confess.

Sarah and Hassan were free. They stayed in Australia for a days with Inspector Aziz, who shows them his “beautiful country”.

The end

The conclusion

Why you liked/disliked the book?

I really love the book, I think is one of the books that I really love. It´s very interesting, because it talks about a real story about drugs, specially heroin (white death), and also because it´s a good way to learn that drugs are not good, “they”(=The drugs) change your personality, they destroy you slowly and also kill you (=Death white).

Other things I have liked the book was the vocabulary, it was easy to learn (judge, court, jury, courtroom...)
