

This story is about a married couple and their baby. They're going for a safari at the weekend. A guide was also accompanying them. The husband's name is George and the wife's name is Susan and the baby Danny. All started when they were going for the safari and on the way there was a hole and BOOM! the car crashed. They all lost the memory except the baby. There, there was an elephant that caught the baby. When Susan woke up she called the emergency number and a helicopter was there.

The Police believed that she had lost her memory. The last day Danny was found by the Umfolozi Reserve guards and Danny went to an orphanage. With the time Danny grew and he was adopted by one family and now his name was Samuel. He was a good student and went away to the Norwich University. At Norwich University, he met a girl. She told him about a trip by bicycle in the islands of the north of Scotland to help the orphans and Danny went.

Tracy and Danny went for a bike ride, but suddenly Tracy fell and Danny went to ask for help, and a lady helped them and invited them to enter her house. The lady was Susan, she saw the mark that Samuel had in the arm and it seemed familiar. At night Susan had a dream it was the accident that she had had. She woke up and she went for a walk and met Samuel and started to speak and Susan felt confused. The next day she went to the psychologist and there she started to remember the accident that she had had and there she remembered that Samuel was her baby. When she went out she called Samuel and told him all. They got together and now they were a happy family. A couple of weeks later they went to visit Sam and Samuel's parents by plane.
