When teenagers feel bored, they usually chat with friends. But not Jacob Barnett. Jacob takes a whiteboard marker and does difficult maths problems on the living room window. This clever teenager is only 15, and he's already studying maths and physics at the prestigious Perimeter Institute for Theoretical Physics in Waterloo, Canada. That's extraordinary for any young teenager, but it's even more amazing for Jacob because he's autistic.

Jacob's IQ is 170. That's higher than Einstein's! Like most boys his age, Jacob enjoys playing video games, watching TV and science fiction films. So, in many ways he's like a typical teenager. But he's hard-working and does very unusual activities for his age. Jacob's favourite subject is astrophysics. According to Jacob, Einstein's Theory of Relativity isn't correct and he's working on a new theory to take its place. That's not bad for a 15 year old!

Everyone knows animals enjoy listening to music. But do you know some animals play music, too? At the Thai Elephant Conservation Center in Thailand, there's an orchestra with elephant musicians!

The Thai Elephant Orchestra started in 1997. Neuroscientist and musician Dave Soldier was one of the creators of the group. He knew the elephants liked music, and he decided to design special instruments for the elephants to play. Originally, there were five elephant musicians, but now there are 14. They play marimbas, drums and xylophones. These instruments sound like traditional Thai instruments and the orchestra's music is very similar to Thai classical music. Sometimes, a conductor tells the elephants when to stop or start and sometimes they improvise, but all their music is original.

The orchestra made three albums of their music. They don't tour around the country because it isn't easy to transport 14 elephants. But you can hear their unusual live music at the Thai Elephant Conservation Center in Lampang, Thailand.
