Spanish prosecutors investigate racist football abuse against Vinícius Júnior

Spanish prosecutors have opened an investigation over racist chants hurled at Real Madrid's Brazilian forward Vinícius Júnior during a weekend match, as the head of Spain's football federation admitted the country had a "problem" with racism.

- 5 The prosecutor's office in the eastern city of Valencia, where the game took place, was investigating the incident as a possible "hate crime", judicial sources said, after Luis Rubiales of the Royal Spanish Football Federation called for zero tolerance. "We have a problem of behaviour, of education, of racism," Rubiales said. "And as long as there is one fan or one group of fans making insults based on someone's sexual orientation or skin colour or belief, then we have a serious problem."
- 10 Valencia said it had banned one of its fans for life and was looking to identify others. "The club has analysed all the available footage, working alongside the authorities as rapidly as possible to clarify what happened," it said in a statement. Real Madrid said it strongly condemned the incident, which it believed to be a hate crime. Speaking after Sunday's game, Real Madrid's Italian manager, Carlo Ancelotti, said the racist abuse – in which
- 15 Vinícius was repeatedly called a "monkey" – highlighted how "something bad is happening in this league".

- The Spanish league has made nine similar formal complaints for racist abuse against Vinícius over the past two seasons, most of which have been shelved. Fans have been fined and banned from stadiums, but so far only a Mallorca supporter may end up going on trial
- 20 for allegedly racially insulting the Brazilian during a game.

Officials, players and former players in Brazil and Spain showed solidarity with 22-year-old Vinícius; for instance, the former Brazil striker Ronaldo said: "Another case of racism against Vinícius in the Spanish league. Until when? As long as there is impunity, there will be racism."
