Texto

Perth, Scotland

The city of Perth, Scotland, is the county town of Perthshire and formally known as St. John's town or even called The Fair City by the novelist Sir Walter Scott. He considered it to be the most beautiful town of Scotland. It is not very big, with a population of about 45.000 inhabitants. It is located on the banks of the river Tay. It was the capital of Scotland until the middle of the 16th century.

It has always been a city for farming and less dependent on the traditional Scottish industries such as fishing, textiles and engineering. The river Tay is much loved for fly-fishing as it contains salmon, trout and lampreys. The city has two "inches" (The North and The South) or parks, where the locals can practise a wide range of sporting activities such as golf, football, rugby, hockey and cricket. The North Inch was, in fact, the site for the "battle of the clans" in 1396. Obviously, the local people no longer practise that type of physical exercise. "The clans" refer to the way Scottish society was governed by certain families' surnames. The prefix "mac" means "belonging to". For example: Macgregor or Macdonald.

The city is sometimes referred to as the "Gateway to the Highlands" because many years ago the only way to go from Edinburgh up to the north of Scotland, without going up the coastal route, was via Perth. Three kilometres away from this city lies the town Scone where the last Kings and Queens of Scotland were crowned.
